

74 Million of Us Can't All Be Wrong: Meet the Trump Voters Who Are Fed Up with Political Correctness and Tired of Being Overlooked

In the wake of the 2016 presidential election, many Americans were left scratching their heads. How could Donald Trump, a man who had been accused of sexual assault, racism, and xenophobia, win the presidency? In his new book, 74 Million of Us Can't All Be Wrong, author David Mangum takes a deep dive into the minds of Trump voters, exploring their motivations and beliefs.

Mangum argues that Trump voters are not simply racists and sexists, but rather a diverse group of Americans who are fed up with political correctness and tired of being overlooked. He writes:

““Trump voters are not a monolith. They come from all walks of life, and they have a variety of reasons for supporting him. But what unites them is a shared sense of frustration with the status quo. They feel that the country is going in the wrong direction, and they are looking for someone to shake things up.””

Mangum spent years interviewing Trump voters from all over the country. He spoke to white working-class voters in Ohio, Hispanic voters in Texas, and African-American voters in Florida. He found that Trump voters are often people who feel left behind by the economy and the political system. They are tired of being told that they are racist or sexist simply because they voted for Trump.

Mangum's book is a timely and important contribution to the ongoing conversation about Trump voters. It is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the forces that led to Trump's victory in 2016.

Who Are Trump Voters?

Trump voters are a diverse group of Americans. They come from all walks of life, and they have a variety of reasons for supporting him. But what unites them is a shared sense of frustration with the status quo. They feel that the country is going in the wrong direction, and they are looking for someone to shake things up.

One of the most common reasons that people voted for Trump is that they are unhappy with the economy. They feel that the economy is not working for them, and they are looking for someone who will bring back jobs and prosperity. Trump promised to do this, and many voters were willing to give him a chance.

Another reason that people voted for Trump is that they are tired of political correctness. They feel that they can no longer say what they think without being labeled as racist or sexist. Trump promised to put an end to political correctness, and many voters were attracted to this message.

Finally, some people voted for Trump simply because they wanted to shake things up. They were tired of the same old politicians, and they were looking for someone who would change the status quo. Trump promised to do this, and many voters were willing to give him a chance.

What Do Trump Voters Want?

Trump voters want a lot of things. They want the economy to improve, they want to put an end to political correctness, and they want to shake things up. But what they all want most is to be heard.

Trump voters feel that they have been ignored by the political system for too long. They feel that their concerns are not being addressed, and they are tired of being treated like second-class citizens. Trump promised to listen to them, and many voters were willing to give him a chance.

It is important to remember that Trump voters are not a monolith. They have a variety of reasons for supporting him, and they want different things from him. But what they all want most is to be heard.
