

The Fight for Environmental Justice Within Government Agencies

By [Author's Name]

The fight for environmental justice is a struggle that has been going on for decades. It is a fight for the right to live in a healthy environment, free from pollution and contamination. It is a fight for the right to have a say in the decisions that are made about the environment, and the right to hold those who pollute our communities accountable.

The fight for environmental justice is a fight that is often fought at the local level, in the communities that are most impacted by pollution and contamination. But it is also a fight that is fought in the halls of government, where decisions are made about environmental policy.
