What Made the Trident So Special?

There were several factors that contributed to the Trident's success. First and foremost, it had a very powerful engine. The 750cc triple-cylinder engine was capable of producing over 50 horsepower, which was a lot of power for a production motorcycle in the late 1960s.

In addition to its powerful engine, the Trident also had very good handling. The frame was lightweight and rigid, and the suspension was well-tuned. This made the Trident very agile and easy to ride, even at high speeds.

Finally, the Trident was also a very good-looking motorcycle. The sleek lines and distinctive triple exhaust system made the Trident stand out from the crowd. It was a motorcycle that was both beautiful and functional.

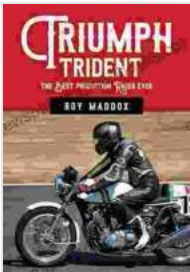

The Trident's Legacy
